INDIGENOUS CULTURAL SAFETY AND HUMILITY, ANTI-RACISM AND INCLUSIVITY

CPBC recognizes that systemic racism and intolerance toward traditional Indigenous perspectives and approaches to health, as well as the enduring impacts of colonialism, continue to result in persistent barriers and greater health disparities for Indigenous Peoples in British Columbia.

Our committees are committed to taking active steps to identify, address, prevent and eliminate Indigenous-specific and other forms of racism and discrimination within our healthcare system. Our committees require diverse voices to ensure that all decisions respect unique cultural perspectives, including the specific rights, interests, priorities and concerns of First Nations, Inuit and Métis Peoples.

COMMITTEE MEMBER COMPETENCIES

CPBC committees are composed of members with diverse experiences, backgrounds and perspectives to promote comprehensive discussions that accurately represent the demographic make-up of British Columbia.

To achieve this, the CPBC Board has developed a Composition Matrix outlining the essential competencies for an effective Board, including the desired values, skills, experiences, and knowledge for optimal composition. Its components are also applied towards the committee appointment process and the Composition Matrix serves as a tool to identify and address any gaps in an individual committee's collective capabilities.

We strongly advise potential committee members to review the Composition Matrix thoroughly, as it will guide our assessment of candidates for available committee positions.
